I just read an article by David Cay Johnston on a proposed rule to force states and municipalities to disclose the rules by which they allow corporations to escape property taxes. The article, moreover, alleges that some companies are even allowed to pocket state income taxes collected from workers, sales taxes collected at the register . . . I find these practices beyond the pale. And so would a majority of American citizens if this knowledge became widely known. Please help institute rules that force state and local governments to make public the various tax dodges they offer to businesses.

Thank you, John Davis
